International Exhibitions subserve a twofold purpose. They instruct and stimulate. The former result they effect by the display of the objects exhibited; the latter they induce by comparison. Beyond this, they afford a comprehensive view of the existing state of the World in the domain of Science and Art, and of Manufactures, to which the two former are wedded. A species of reciprocal study of nation by nation is thus engendered, which, since the first International Exhibition in 1851, has achieved great results.

But if, in the purely material order, this reciprocal study of peoples one by another be an unqualified good, inasmuch as tending to weld them into one great body with common interests, it cannot but be of weighty import, in the higher sphere of national thought and aspiration.

Now, it is mainly in the Periodical Press of a country that these are to be gauged. The standard literary works of a nation give, it is true, the measure of its highest intellectual development; but only as represented in a few of its choicest and strongest minds: it is in its Periodical Literature that we must look for the average mind of a people, depicted in those ever varying, shifting phases of idea, act and habit incident to the collective life of great masses of men.

In the purely material order, too, it is here that we must look for the reflex of national activity and progress. The Press is the universal vehicle of demand and supply. It performs much the same functions for the nation as the lungs for the individual. For, as the lungs furnish the blood with the recreative agent indispensable to its unimpaired vitality and strength, so, through the Periodical Press of a nation are assimilated by the masses those ever progressing ideas, which, whether as political economy, social science, arts, manufactures or inventions, are the elements upon which national life flourishes.

It was with the idea of contributing the American quota to the ephemeral intellectual Department of the Vienna Exhibition that I undertook to collect our Periodical Literature, and send it there.

Of the long and anxious labor involved in bringing together and ordering this Collection, I prefer saying nothing: those conversant with the multitudinous and harrassing details of such undertakings will be able to estimate it. The difficulty and expense attendant on this undertaking, entered upon and carried through single-handed, were fairly looked in the face from the outset, still they immeasurably exceeded my calculations.

It was, moreover, a source of surprise and regret to find that, notwithstanding the most energetic and persistent action, a proportion of the Periodical Press of America, numbering nearly one-third of the whole, failed to put it in my power to represent them at all.

Notwithstanding this drawback, the extent, power and influence of the American Periodical Press, the young but sturdy outgrowth of the free institutions of this country, could be, and were, rightly judged even from the incomplete Collection sent. This consisted of some six thousand Specimens out of a total estimated at eight thousand five hundred. The real number, however, can only be approximately stated, inasmuch as the Periodical Press of America enjoys less than any other an immunity from constant change; is ever engaged in chronicling the birth of some members and the demise of others, and counts among its ranks a large number of periodicals, whose lot is cast in localities remote from the great centres, whose voice never reaches the ear of the Great Public, which are ushered into the world and die without leaving a trace of their existence behind. There are, too, hundreds of papers existing for long periods in the cities large and small, known to and read by a particular class, but totally unheeded outside it.

The above aggregate, then, took not only Europe, but even America by surprise; pointing as it did to the fact that, in numbers at least, the Periodical Press of this country stands at the head of the World, and suggesting the further inferences usually considered deducible from such data.

The International Jury awarded the Medal of Merit to this Collection, and a very large share of public attention was directed to it.

I was unwilling, however, that the utility of the Collection, such as it might be, should be circumscribed to the period and place of the Vienna Exhibition, and have accordingly carried out the second part of my plan, realized in this Catalogue.

The aim of this work was not merely to enumerate the various periodicals, but to describe them accurately,* and, above all, to state succinctly the chief subject-matter to which each is devoted. I had further intended to give collateral information, but this purpose was thwarted by the causes herein stated. It was, indeed, a matter of extreme difficulty to gather even as much information as is contained in this Catalogue. Of many publications I was enabled to mention only the bare title; of others little more. Even in cases where the information was apparently complete, inaccuracies may possibly have been occasioned by erroneous returns. This I consider more likely to be the case in regard to the subject-matter. Most of the statements made are based upon direct information from the publishers themselves; in many cases I have had to judge solely from a Specimen-number, and the absence of all information in individual cases, will show how often I was left quite in the dark.

These and other reasons I must allege as palliatory of such inaccuracies and omissions as may be noticed, together with the fact that while this Catalogue was going through the press, many of the publications herein enumerated ceased to exist, whilst many hundreds were started during the same period.

The Index will also have to claim the benefit of analogous qualifications.

Systematic subdivisions of subject-matter gave 417 different Headings—such further information as I failed to receive would probably have increased that number.

In order to put the information contained in this Catalogue within reach of the whole World, the Headings have been given in English, German, Dutch, French, Italian, and Spanish.

A list of Periodicals printed in foreign languages, and a short Catalogue of Original American Books are appended.

The Abbreviations used in this Catalogue with their explanations, are the following:

Agr.	for Agriculture.	Man.	for Manufacture.
Amat. Lit.	" Amateur Literature.	Med.	" Medicine.
Ann.	" Annual.	Mus.	" Music.
Bi-m.	" Bi-monthly.	N., P.	" News, Politics.
